Hearing loss increases risk of dementia

People who are hard of hearing spend more energy listening. That energy comes at the expense of other cognitive functions. Cognitive functions are the mental processes in the brain that enable us to think and solve problems, among other things.

In a new study featuring data from 573.088 people, researchers from the Department of Clinical Research at the University of Southern Denmark have found a link between hearing loss and the development of dementia. The study is the largest of its kind to date.

There is already an increase in the number of people with dementia. This is mainly due to the ageing of the population as a whole, but there are of developing dementia also other risk factors, compared to people with such as lifestyle and normal hearing.
